

"...Hyunh, hunh... Ahh, Darmi, where's my daddy? Where's my daddy? That song... That's the song daddy always plays for me before I go to sleep... I'll sing the next part."

I tried to imagine what the Majora's Mask Carnival would be at the end. That means masks, of course, and it was fun to imagine more "natural" masks for each species... I confess that I had great fun turning the Zoras into something more Venetians... This was something I had in mind for a long time.

"Eat, Drink, and Be Merry ...For Tomorrow, Hyrule will be Destroyed."

I had a thought about doing a depiction of the Kokiri celebrating their last night before Hyrule is flooded, and thought it would be interesting to tie it into the Koroks celebration in Wind Waker. They celebrate the Koroks leaving, spreading trees to the whole world in order to continue the survival of future generations, and so I thought: "What if that celebration was first celebrated when the Kokiri left for the mountain tops of Hyrule?"

Festival of Time

Once a year the ocarina plays a special melody that is capable of showing reflections of time. The kokiri gather to celebrate and observe the song in the night hours. Zelda is in attendance and next to her are reflections of her child self and child Link. In the smoke is an image of Link's fate.

The WindFish Festival
In Konolint Island, the villagers of Mabe and Animal village never travel to each other. But this festival is special since it is the only time of the year when the sister villages are brought together and they meet. There, the inhabitants of the Island all listen to Link and Marin sing the Ballad of the Wind Fish.

The Gerudo's Red Moon Festival

Celebrated with many torches and little fires all over the Gerudo Desert. The red moon symbolises their hot-blooded, racy nature and recalls the spiritual energy that is also present in the Spirit Temple you can see on the horizon. The colour red has always been very important to the Gerudo race, as they are born with red hair, this colour bears a very profound nature to them, they associate it with vitality, passion, energy and of course, power.

Ikana Festival of the Dead

It's based on the idea of the dead rising once a year on the day of Link's triumph of the Stone Tower Temple to celebrate living, so it's akin with Dia de los Muertos, obviously.

DECEMBER

Every year, after a grueling 7 days of summer, Yeto and Yeta hold a "big" celebration for the arrival of a new winter. They make paper snowflake necklaces, Yeto carves himself a new wooden hat, and Yeta makes a new blanket. Outside they have a little campfire and sing songs while Yeto makes his "famous" Freshwinter Stew. This is followed by eating, telling stories and laughing together. This year they invited their new friend Link and even made him a special hat and tunic for the celebration!
